The Hiring Interview

- Impression management: Effective Interviewing
 - Job Applicant
 - Interviewer

Lecture 30 : Interviewing for Employment

Types of Interviews

4. Exit interview - designed to determine why someone is leaving a position
5. Counseling interview - designed to provide guidance
6. Hiring interview - designed to select the right person for a job

Procedure (contd.)

- Once students understand the criteria and are familiar with the evaluation forms, the instructor schedules specific dates for the fish-bowl discussions.
- Typically, the actual discussions take approximately 20 to 25 minutes, so two to three groups can present in a single class period, depending upon the length of the class.

Lecture 30 : Interviewing for Employment

Examples of types of Interviews

4. Employee and employer, to refine the hiring process, to help prevent other employees from leaving, or merely to make the departure a more pleasant experience for both.
5. Conducted by someone trained in Psychology, to guide and support the interviewee.
6. Purpose of filling up an Employment position.

are 30 : Interviewing for Employment

What is an Interview?

- The nature of Interviews: Beyond conversation
 - Interview —most common type of purposeful, planned, decision-making, person-to-person communication

Lecture 26 : Group Discussions Lab (Practice Session) I

Rationale

Activity has value for several reasons:

- Evaluators consider not only the content discussed but also the communication activities that help or hinder discussion.
- Structure provides a systematic way to identify, examine, and teach specific interpersonal communication behaviors.
- Activity provides an opportunity for an entire class to participate by requiring students to either participate in a discussion or evaluate one.

Rationale (contd.)

- Activity pushes students to conduct research and form opinions on topics relevant to the course as well as their future professional life.
- The focus shifts from the teacher to the students - a significant method for promoting deeper learning among students (Anderson & Soden 2001; Kjellin & Stenfors, 2003).

Lecture 26 : Group Discussions Lab (Practice Session) I

Introduction

- Employers view effective communication as critical to an individual's success in today's competitive workplace.
- Activity designed to provide specific help in developing interpersonal communication and discussion skills critical to success in business and society (McPherson, 2005)

Procedure (contd.)

- The group meets together to create a list of 8 to 10 key questions the group thinks ought to be posed or addressed during the discussion.
- Students can rank the questions and address them in order of importance.
- Students should turn in the final list of questions the class session prior to the group's discussion to make certain adequate preparations occur.

ecture 26 : Group Discussions Lab (Practice Session) I

Procedure (contd.)

- Groups select a member of the group to serve as a facilitator.
- The facilitator starts with a brief introduction (no longer than 2 minutes) of the topic and the purpose of the fishbowl discussion.
- Facilitator may also assume the role of keeping the dialogue moving if conversation wanes.
- In the final few minutes, the instructor lets the group know that the time is up and that each person will have 30 seconds to give a final statement about his / her position or feelings about the topic discussed.

ure 26 : Group Discussions Lab (Practice Session) I

Introduction (contd.)

- Activity uses a “fishbowl” discussion, a term derived from the format of the discussion.
- Active participants are surrounded by observers (similar to fish in a fishbowl) who listen to and evaluate the dynamics of the smaller group (Dutt, 1997; Hensley, 2002; Silberman & Hansburg, 2004), as shown in Figure 1.
